bromera

Sometimes I feel small.
Not like a little girl, but really small.
Small as a pea or a grain of sand.

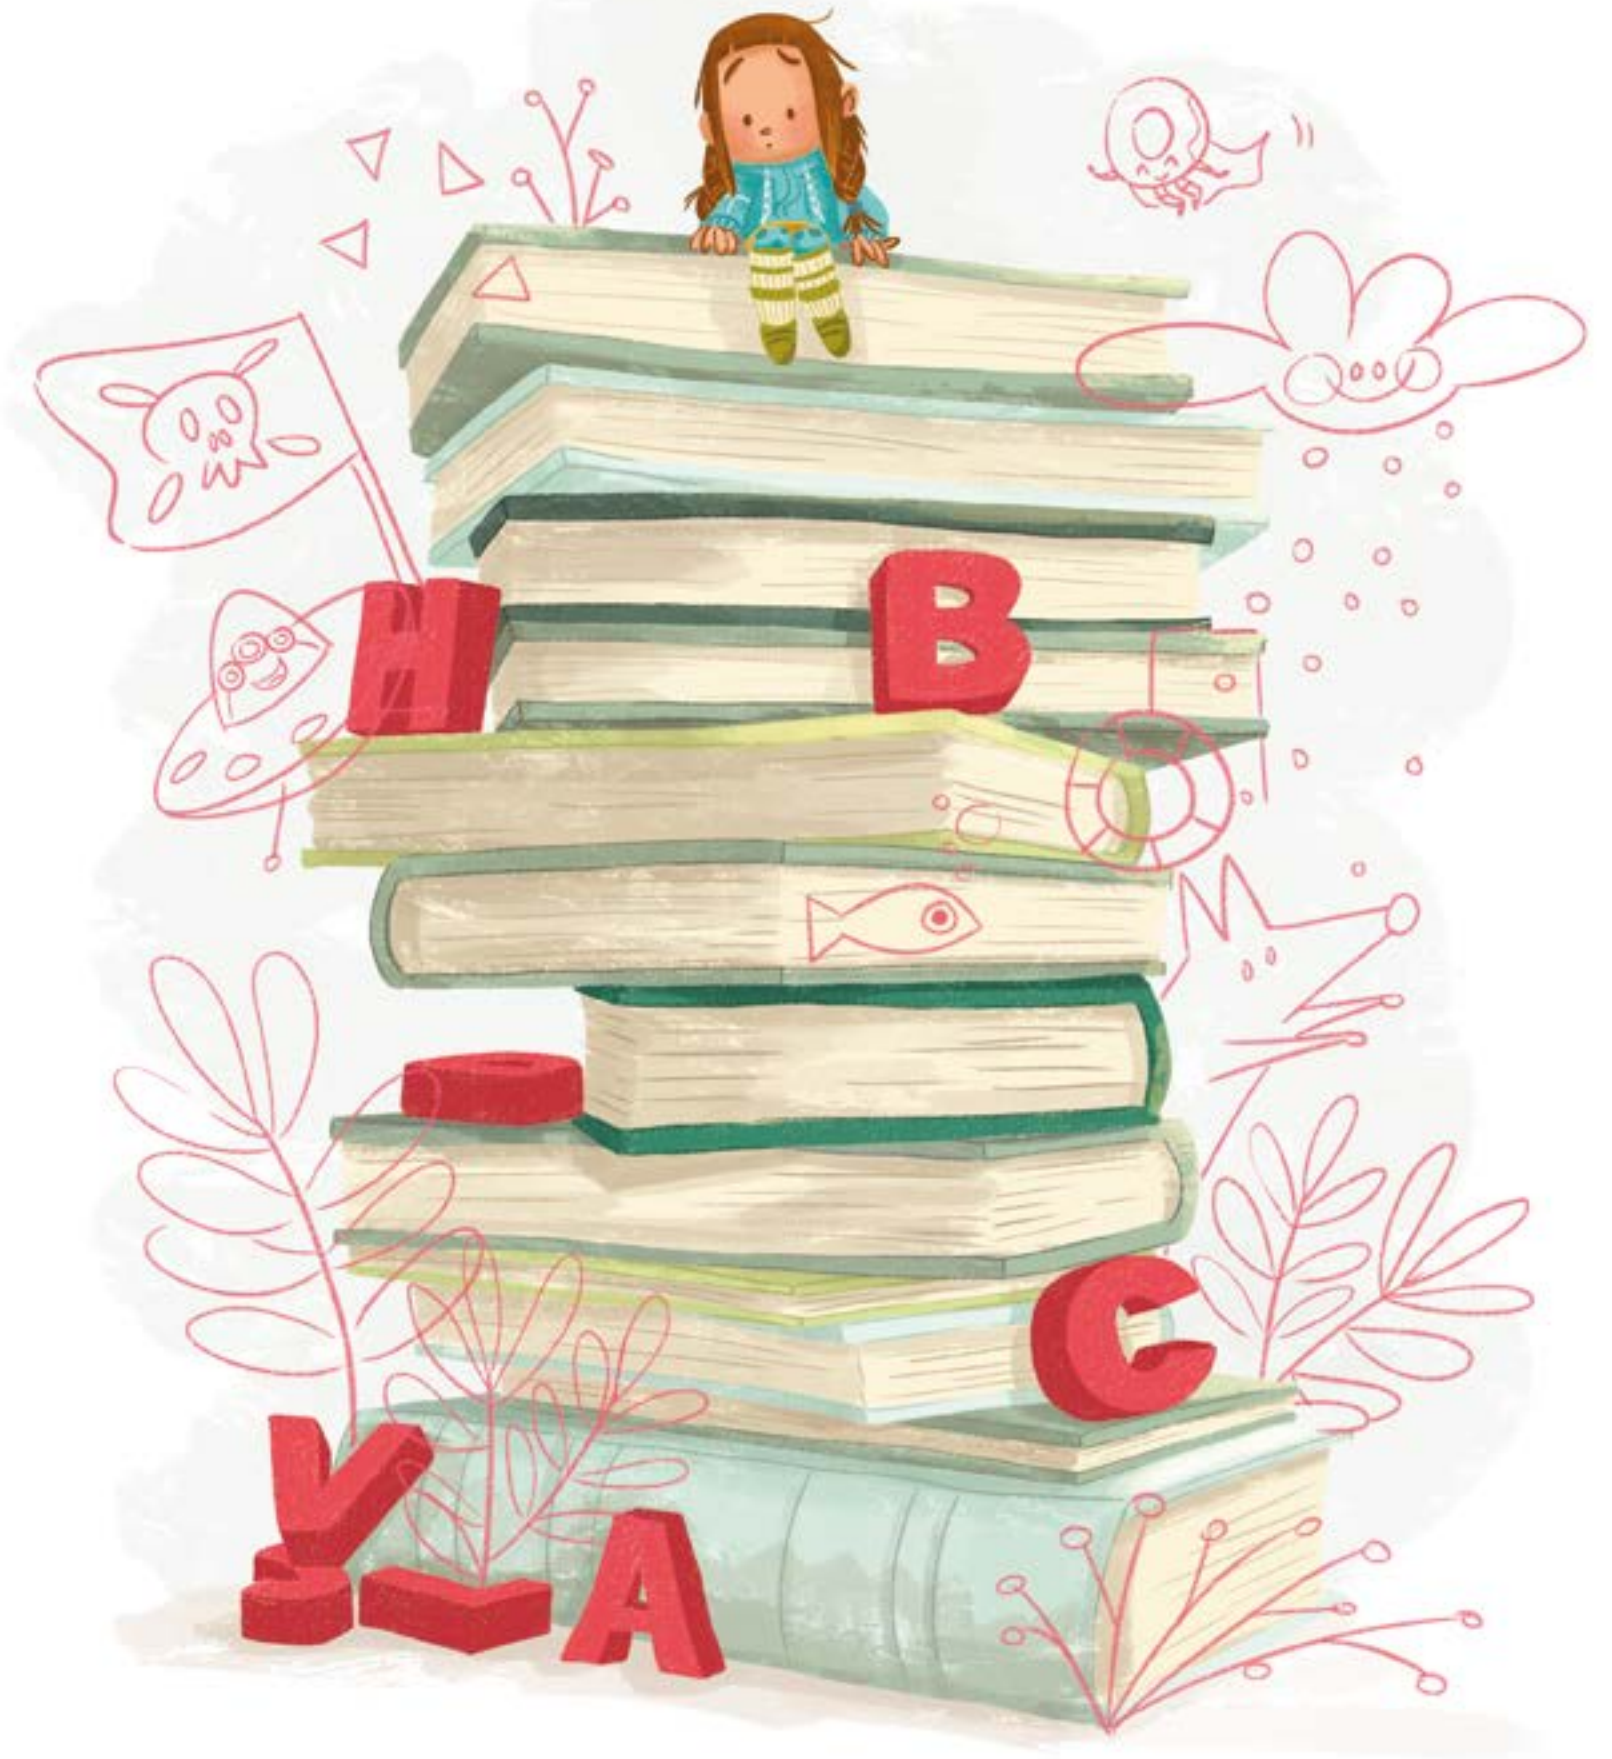

In the mornings, when I go to school,
I feel small.

Along the way there are large, lush trees. They have so many branches and leaves that lots of birds and their families live among them.

In the afternoons, as I sit reading,
I feel small.

There are hundreds of millions of words and thousands of fantastic stories in my books. So many that I could never finish them all, even if I never stopped reading.

At night, when I look up at the sky,
I feel small.

There are asteroids, stars and a lot of planets up there. Everything is so big it's almost impossible to imagine.
