

Tuntun

Anya Damirón / Pablo Pino

algar

Once upon a time
there was an elephant who was big...

Very
very veeeery
BIG!

HUGE!

So big, so big,
that he could barely walk.
His steps always sounded

And that was his name:

Tuntun.

Every time they heard
Tun! TUN! TuUuN! TuUuN! TUN!

the animals, scared, ran without stopping.

They hid in the trees,
inside caves
or under the water until everything calmed down...

Frightened, they imagined many things:

“I think it’s a dinosaur!”

“What if it’s a giant monster?”

A green dragon with orange wings is breathing fire at a giraffe. The dragon is flying through the air, and the giraffe is looking up at it with a surprised expression.

“Maybe it’s a machine?”

A zebra is looking at a red tractor. The tractor is a tracked vehicle with a blue blade, and it is moving through a grassy field. The zebra has a surprised expression.

“It could be a dragon!”

A red tractor with a blue blade is moving through a grassy field. The tractor is a tracked vehicle, and it is kicking up dust. In the background, there are green hills and a yellow sun.

But none of them knew what was really happening.

Until one day
a brave wasp saw Tuntun very sad and decided to help him...

"I'm tired of being alone!"
I never find anyone to play with.

She flew high, very high,
and with all her strength
she stung Tuntun
right behind!

“OOUUUuuuch!”

Tuntun screamed.

And very, very scared,
he ran, ran and ran
through the whole jungle.

Tuntun ran so fast
that he bumped into some animals.

