Walrus

never slept at night.
He loved to watch the stars and discover the colours of the sky.

But then, during the day,
he was so tired
he couldn't stop
yawning.

Any time,
anywhere.
He couldn't help it!

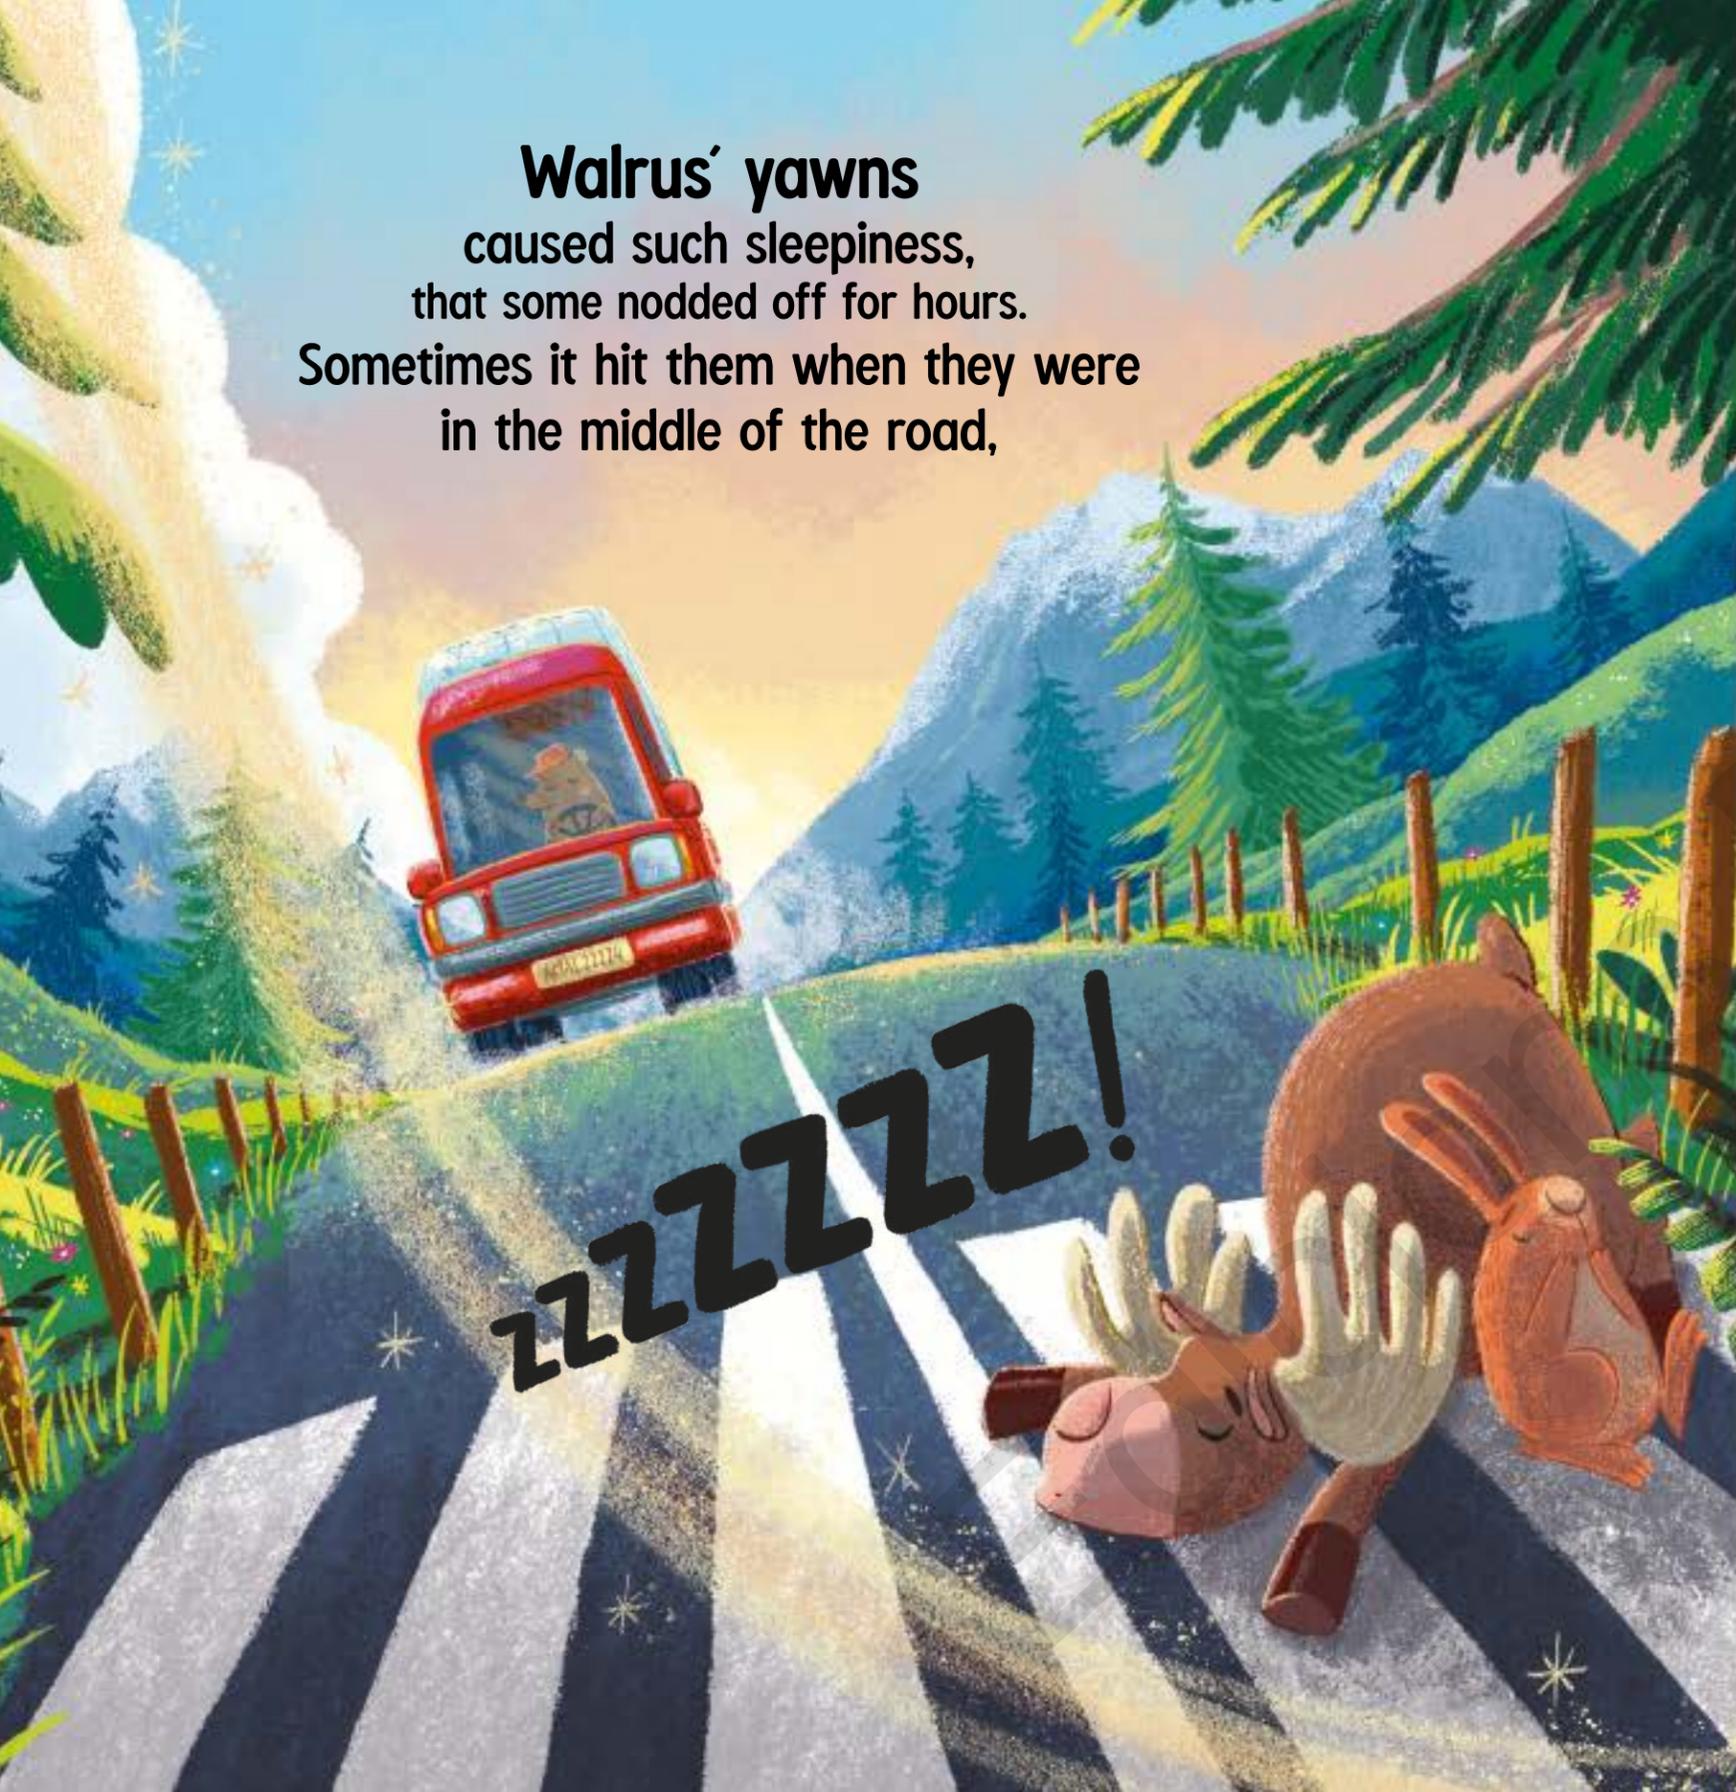

The sound travelled
far, far, far and wide,
causing many animals
to fall asleep.

The noise or the frequency weren't a problem,
but rather it was
contagious,
and not only those who were nearby.

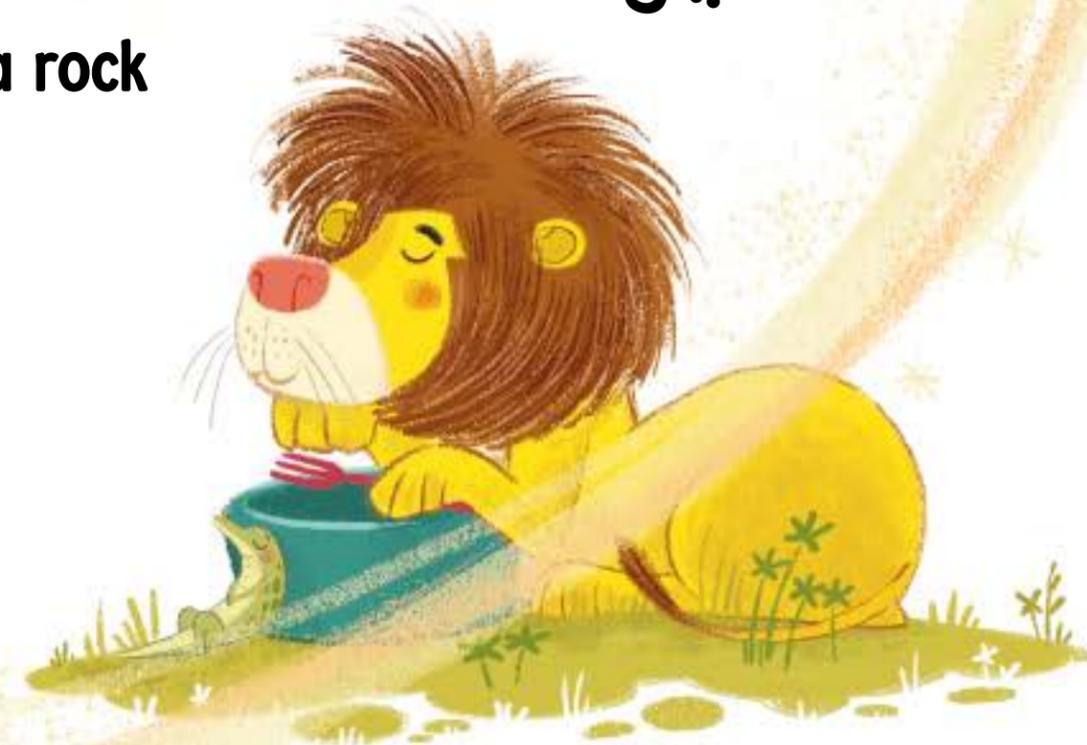

Walrus' yawns
caused such sleepiness, that some nodded off for hours.
Sometimes it hit them when they were in the middle of the road, zzzzzzzz!

perched on a rock

or even eating..

Having slept
unexpectedly,
they woke up disoriented,

in pain

and sometimes grumpy.

Walrus, however,
despite yawning and yawning
all the time,

could go for days
without sleep.

But he never had any energy,
and tripped up easily,

he was sad
and bored...
